NORTH SHORE HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Did You Know?

A public health approach to preventing gun violence recognizes that violence is contagious and can become epidemic within a society. Firearm deaths, including homicides, suicides, and unintentional shootings are a prevalent cause of morbidity and mortality in the United States. Each year we lose over 30,000 people from firearm-related violence. The public health approach is focused on finding the cause to a problem and implementing preventative measures. Gun violence can be studied with the same approach by using tools such as surveillance, epidemiologic analysis, intervention design, and evaluation to develop solutions and policies to eliminate the threat. What can be done to help decrease firearm deaths?

- Conducting surveillance to track gun-related deaths and injuries, gain insight into the causes of gun violence and assess the impact of interventions
- Identifying risk factors associated with gun violence (i.e., poverty and depression) and resilience or protective factors that guard against gun violence (i.e., youth access to trusted adults)
- Developing, implementing and evaluating interventions to reduce risk factors and build resilience

What is the North Shore Health Department (NSHD) doing?

The NSHD is an active member of REDgen, a North Shore coalition dedicated to promoting balance and resiliency for children and teenagers.

In partnership with Mental Health America of Wisconsin (MHA) to prevent youth and adult suicide and other firearm-related violence, the NSHD distributes gun locks to police departments in the north shore.

The health department is also a part of the Prevent Suicide Greater Milwaukee Coalition. The coalition promotes suicide prevention by providing education, increasing awareness, and facilitating community collaboration.

What is the North Shore Health Department working on?

A public health nurse attended a training on Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACEs). The training included information on how ACEs influence adult health risk and behaviors, the relationship between ACEs and social outcomes, and how local health departments can incorporate ACEs and trauma-informed care.

A public health nurse co-presented as part of REDgen to a group of day care providers and parents on the topic of “Seven C’s of Resiliency”. The Seven C’s are from Dr. Kenneth Ginsburg’s book, “Building Resilience in Children and Teens: Giving Kids Roots and Wings.” We briefly discussed the seven C’s and the group participated in a series of activities that prompted discussion and brainstorming on what this looks like. We concluded by having a discussion on the challenges parents and teachers may have in promoting resiliency in our kids.
