October is Domestic Violence Prevention Month. Domestic violence (also called intimate partner violence, domestic abuse or relationship abuse) affects millions of people of all genders, every race, religion, culture and status. Nearly three out of four Americans personally know someone who is or has been a victim of domestic violence.

Domestic violence doesn't look the same in every relationship because every relationship is different. But one thing most abusive relationships have in common is that the abusive partner asserts more power and control over their partner. Some of the signs of an abusive relationship include a partner who:

- Tells you that you can never do anything right
- Shows extreme jealousy of your friends and time spent away
- Keeps you or discourages you from seeing friends or family members
- Insults, demeans or shames you with put-downs
- Controls every penny spent in the household
- Takes your money or refuses to give you money for necessary expenses
- Looks at you or acts in ways that scare you
- Controls who you see, where you go, or what you do
- Prevents you from making your own decisions
- Tells you that you are a bad parent or threatens to harm or take away your children
- Prevents you from working or attending school
- Destroys your property or threatens to hurt or kill your pets
- Intimidates you with guns, knives or other weapons
- Pressures you to have sex when you don't want to or do things sexually you're not comfortable with
- Pressures you to use drugs or alcohol

Since the Violence Against Women Act passed in 1994, we've come a long way. This landmark legislation holds offenders accountable and provide programs and services for victims. Between 1993 and 2010, the overall rate of domestic violence dropped nearly two-thirds and state laws have reformed to address issues such as dating abuse in the workplace, stalking, employment discrimination and more.

If you need assistance or want to talk to someone about domestic violence, call the National Domestic Violence Hotline at 1-800-799-7233 or online chat at www.thehotline.org/ to speak with a trained advocate.

What is the North Shore Health Department working on?

A public health nurse presented to the staff at the St. Francis Child Care Center on medication safety and childhood injuries. One of the essential services that local health departments provide is to inform, educate and empower people about health issues. Our partnerships with groups such as local child care centers are an example of how we do this.

Just in time for Halloween, three classes at Brown Deer Elementary School learned about pedestrian safety last week from a public health nurse, reading the book "Clifford Takes a Walk". The story highlights some key messages for kids about walking safely out in the community. The books are made available through a SafeKids grant. Safekids is an international organization dedicated to ending childhood injuries.
